Correspondence.

LOUISVILLE, May 31st, 1852.

To the Editor of the Herald.

DEAR SIR.—Our village is beginning to manifest signs of activity in the occurrences of every day life; some few notes of which you will find in my letter.

After a great deal of threatening, the Typographical Society (on Saturday last,) issued a handbill on which was an engraving portraying the interior of the Courier Office with caricatures of the workmen therein, (represented as rats,) and underneath were given their names, with the various misdeeds they had been guilty of; and, to be candid about the matter, there is a pretty spirit evinced by the author, that is calculated to injure himself more, in the estimation of the public, than it will aid his cause. Quant Suff.

WALSH, of the Sunday Varieties, still persists in poking fun at Bull's Sparilla, in spite of suits, damages, and lawyers, and I think, as usual, the Press will get the better of the "muzler."

Yesterday (Sunday) about daylight, the glass works took fire, but it was extinguished without much damage. In the afternoon, three or four of the mazlers in running out at a false alarm, came together at the corner of 3rd and Green streets, and a general row ensued. Spanners were called in requisition; pockets filled with bricabacs, and, as the "B'hys" term it, they gassed a quantity, took hold of their machines, and went home quietly without hurting any body.

Professor Gardiner, the New England soap man, gave a lecture on Friday night; admittance twenty five cents with a cake of soap thrown in. He is a witty, vivacious and intelligent lecturer, and quite a genius in the soap line. A large audience was present which have patronised the tailors pretty extensively since them in the way of buttons burst off during the lecture, the number of which was "prodigious," as Domine Sampson has it. There was any quantity of fighting done yesterday, among the inhabitants of water street, or as they are generally termed, the "wharf rats."

The city is healthy, weather warm and dry, business rather dull except in building, in which I think Louisville will compete with any city in the south or west; new houses are going up every where, and you can not find a builder out of employment in the city. If the present times will continue for a few years, the famous Queen city will be fairly rivaled.

Yours most respectfully,

"MOMUS."

COL. J. P. PRYOR, one of the editors of the Memphis Eagle and Enquirer is now on a tour: and from one of his interesting letters from Washington City, the following extract is taken:—

It is surprising to find how different are the estimates placed upon character here and at home among the people.—Some who possess no personal popularity at home and are not considered talented, but have been elected to Congress by the mere force of a party majority, are here regarded with great favor, as "whole souled fellows," and men of first-rate ability—and vice versa.

Jacob Thompson, of Mississippi, while a member, was very popular, and considered one of the most efficient men in the House. McRae, too, the late Senator from the same State, I find made an excellent impression as a man of clear head and generous heart. Hale, the New Hampshire Abolition Senator, is one of the jolliest of good fellows; while on the other hand Seward, who possesses immense popularity with a certain set in New York, is very unpopular here, and is universally contemned as a cold-blooded Machiavellian, Taliyanistic, Metternichian intrigant. As for Douglass, of Illinois, the Presidential candidate of "Young Democracy," who has made a good deal of character of late years as a politician and something of a statesman, he is a regular built pot-house demagogue of the old time, whose reputation here smells infinitely stronger of the bar-rooms and grog-shops on Pennsylvania Avenue than of the Senate Chamber.

The best anecdote of Lorenzo Dow is that being one evening at the hotel kept by Mr. Bush, in Delhi New York, the residence of the celebrated Gen. Root, he was importuned by the latter gentleman, in the presence of the landlady, to describe Heaven.

Lorenzo turned his grave face, and long waving beard, towards the General and Mr. Bush, and replied, with impetuous gravity,

"Heaven my friend, is a vast extent of smooth rich territory. There is not a root or a bush in it and there never will be."

The Philadelphia City Item, speaking of the Washington House of Philadelphia—a perfect hotel, clean, quiet, rich in all its appointments, cool in summer, servants neat, ever ready and polite, and its proprietor (A. F. Glass Esq.) a model host—lively, courteous and enterprising—the company found at the Washington House the cream of the best society in the country."

THOUGHTS ON GOVERNMENT.

CONTINUED.

LIFE OF THACKERAY.

EVERY BODY knows Thackeray, and nobody knows anything about him. We are therefore glad to help ourselves and our readers to a little knowledge of him, derived from a German authority. He was born in Calcutta in the year 1811, and is now consequently 41 years old. His father was a high official in the East India Company; which secured him the entree of the best society, and a large income. Our author was born a "gentleman." He went to school in England—experienced all the tyranny of a brutal master, and the misery of that system of flogging, of a legalized bullying of the little boys by the larger, which is so repulsive to every noble and decent feeling, and which the Englishmen so stoutly defend, as a practice which "takes the starch out of pride," but which is altogether too unreasonable not to lose temper about in discussing. Thackeray has avenged himself upon the inhuma and disgusting system in his Christian story of "Dr. Birch and his young friends," and he has a general fling at boarding schools in the opening of "Vanity Fair," in which he exhorts the reader to trust the promise of a school prospectus no more than he does the praise of an epithet. He left school for the University of Cambridge, where he studied with Kinglake, the author of Eothén—Eliot Warburton—who wrote "The Crescent and the Cross," and was lost with the Amazon, and Richard Monckton Milnes, a well known London literateur, a poet, and biographer of Keats, and an ornamental liberal member of Parliament.

Meanwhile the elder Thackeray died and the future historian of Vanity Fair launched himself into its midst with an annual income of about a thousand pounds. He lived according to his whims, drew sharp and clever caricatures, smoked, lounged, feasted upon books of every kind, and opened the oyster of the world at leisure. His mother, a woman of great beauty and full of talents and tenderness, whose memory is so filially embalmed in the character of the mother of Arthur Pendennis, married again, about this time, and the young man, always the object of the most prodigious maternal love, came into possession of his parental inheritance. He immediately returned from the continent where he had been staying a little time, and took up his residence in the temple. Nascent jurists and budding barristers at law, who have completed a full course at Cambridge or Oxford, enjoy the privilege of paying high prices for comfortable quarters in the temple, and of eating splendid dinners in its ancient dining room. Here Thackeray entered himself as a student of jurisprudence, and in the character of Warrington in "Pendennis" he has developed the career of the students, and the varied life of the temple in some of the best passages he has ever written.—Henry Taylor, the dramatist, author of Philip Van Artevelde, is among the residents of the temple, and is mentioned by the German commentator as the original of a character in Thackeray's Romance. We are at a loss to determine which, for Warrington is so intent; he seems to us to lose the point.—Warrington is a man of power without a career—Taylor a man of talent, who has certainly achieved a reputation equal to his just claims. However, the temple not only furnished our author characters, but also the necessity of drawing them: for while there, and when scarcely more than twenty-three years old, the young man had looled away his property and was poor. The days of smoking, lounging, and loafing, were evidently ending, and he betook himself to Paris, conceiving from his facility in sketching that he was born for an artist. A brief time among the Parisian ateliers sufficed to remove this idea. But as his stepfather at this period established a journal in London called "The Constitutional," the artist naturally became its Paris correspondent. Thus like Dickens, he commenced his literary career as a journalist. In Paris, Thackeray met his present wife, an Irish lady of good family, and married her.

From thistime dates his first purely literary effort—the "Yellowplush Papers," afterwards published as "James' Diary"—in which his characteristic tendency is clearly indicated. The stepfather's "Constitutional" absorbed most of his property, of course, and failed. The son was obliged to return to England, and to begin work in earnest for himself. He wrote for Frazier's Magazine, and literary reviews, for "The Times," in which he ridiculed the early Bulwer style of romance—the interesting burglars and romantic murderers. But the public, resolved upon enjoying the fascination of crime sentimentally described, received his strictures coldly. The struggling author turned to the humorous sketchy style, to win an ear and gain a penny. Literary friends more fairly favored than he, opened their purses to him, but his wife became insane, and is, at this day, an inmate of an asylum. He worked industriously with his pen—he wrote the "Great Hogarty Diamond," "The Snob Papers," the "Irish Sketch Book," "Journey from Connill to Cairo," "Our Street," "Rebecca and Rowena," "Kirkleberries on the Rhine," and smaller papers, under the name of Michael Augelo Titmarsh, and Chamber's Cyclopaedia commended him, before he was so universally known, as "a quiet observer." In all these sketches his characteristic power shows itself. The two last were written after the great fame and success of "Vanity Fair," but they are only studies for his large pictures—and it may be noted as proof of his genius, that the complete figures are infinitely superior to the designs, and it is in completing the picture from the sketch, so that it shall gain in meaning as well as in elaboration and size, that the true artist is shown. Mr. Thackeray offered the MS. of Vanity Fair to a Magazine. The editor declined it. The author published it, and made his name immortal. It was followed by Pendennis, a mellow, riper fruit, to our fancy, but we have no thought of entering upon a criticism of the author. His latest published literary work is the course of lectures upon the wits of Queen Anne's time, which has been read before literary and fashionable London audiences and received with the greatest applause. Copious abstracts were published in the leading journals, and there is little doubt that they are quite worthy of their author. Mr. Thackeray is now understood to be engaged in completing a novel, of which the scene is laid among the persons and the times treated in his lectures.

One of the signs of the times, and in our opinion not a very good one, is the almost unprecedented success of the work by Mrs. HARRIET BEECHER STOWE, entitled "Uncle Tom's Cabin." Fifty thousand copies were sold in a few weeks after its publication, and it is still selling at the rate of about ten thousand copies a week. We have seen copious extracts from the book in eastern papers, and have no difficulty in accounting for its immense circulation. It is well written and shows considerable dramatic power, but the true secret of its prodigious success is, that it is emphatically an anti-slavery novel, and well adapted to foster feelings and prejudices, already so widely prevalent at the North, as seriously to endanger the stability of the Union. It is for this reason that we regard its popularity as one of the portents of the times, boding no good to the future of the republic. It has been suggested that the effect of Mrs. Stowe's book might be counteracted by a fictitious work reversing the picture which she has drawn of Southern society. We think not. There are but two classes of novels which can succeed, those which are pure works of art, addressing the mind and heart in their normal and healthy condition, and those written with a specific purpose, and of course taking a partial and one-sided view of things, appealing to feelings or sentiments which are already tending to morbid excesses, and aggravating that tendency. Now a work written as an offset to that of Mrs. Stowe could not be a pure work of art, from the very circumstances of the undertaking; and on the other hand, in the appeal to undisciplined feeling and morbid sentiment, the advantage is altogether on the side of the abolitionists. We may generalize the proposition and say, that novels written with definite moral purpose can be successful only when written by the earnest reformer, or the radical destructive. Conservatism can not be defended in this way; and the reason is plain; such works are always highly colored pictures of some one or more of those harsh features which can be found in every social system which Providence has ever permitted to be realized on this earth. The ideal which the writer suggests is of course perfectly beautiful, because he and his readers can have it all their own way, and leave out of their imaginary pictures of society every thing which could mar their fair proportions. The side of the South can be defended, not by the cool, far-seeing comprehensive political philosopher, who can look on all sides of the subject at once, or has been taught wisdom by experiencing the necessity of compromising with the inevitable evils of any and every social organization for the sake of some compensating good or paramount principle. For this reason the South is the natural bulwark of conservatism in this country, and any southern man who throws his influence on the side of radical and disorganizing doctrines is false to the great duties of that peculiar position in which he has been placed by Providence.

We have news at last of our Representative in Congress, Mr. STONE. His name is among the Yeses on the Homestead Bill.

The Louisville Journal contains a piece of blank verse on blindness, signed J. M. H. Spencer county, Ky., which would not have been unworthy of John Milton. It is in our judgment superior to any short poem we have ever seen from the pen of an American writer. We will copy it in our next.

The great strike of operative engineers in England is at an end. The employers have triumphed completely.

On Monday last the heavens displayed a phenomenon which we do not recollect to have ever before witnessed. At midday, the sun shining brightly in a clear sky, except that a few white shreds of gauze-like vapor could be seen near the zenith, a broad circle was formed around the sun in which all the colors of the rainbow were distinctly visible. As near as we could judge this singular rainbow was about eighty degrees from the horizon and of course about ten from the zenith. It remained for a length of time clearly and even vividly displayed on a sky of almost as pure azure as we ever saw.

To the Editor of the Bardstown Herald.

DEAR SIR—On the 25th inst. the members of the M. E. Sunday School of this place convened at their Church, and formed a Procession for the purpose of attending the remains of ROBERT ROGERS, (late of Rodney Miss.) to the Town Burial Ground. The deceased had been a member of the said Sabbath School. And, after the Burial, the Procession returned to the Church, where the following resolutions were offered by T. J. MAYNARD, the Superintendent of said School, and unanimously adopted.

Resolved, That, whereas, it has pleased Almighty God to take from our midst, our beloved young friend and brother, ROBERT ROGERS; while we bow with humble submission to His Will, we deeply deplore our loss, and sympathize most sincerely with his bereaved friends.

Resolved, That in the death of our brother, the School has sustained the loss of one of its most constant and devoted members.

Resolved, That a copy of these resolutions be published in the Nashville and Louisville Christian Advocate, and the Bardstown Herald.

Obituary.

Died—On Wednesday, the 26th ult., of pulmonary consumption, Mrs. LAURA D. PHILLIPS, consort of David Phillips of Marion, and Daughter of Col. Benjamin Doolin, of this county, in the 24th year of her age.

The deceased was born in Bardstown and brought up in the town and the immediate vicinity. It seems but a short time since we saw her standing in the brightest bloom of youth, one of the most lovely in a radiant band of young ladies composing a graduating class of the Bardstown Female Academy. She soon after married and removed to Marion county, where that insidious disease, which it has been often and justly remarked, seems to love to make the most beautiful its victims, laid its hand upon her and soon blighted the fair prospects of earthly happiness—which social advantages and a multitude of friends, the sweetness of her own disposition and the kindness of an affectionate husband had opened before her young life. She returned to the home of her childhood to die in the arms of her darling parents and relatives, whose affliction is consolated by the confident hope that the bright flowers they have seen drop and fade and pass away from the bleak climate of this world, is only transplanted to bloom forever in the presence of God, amidst the unfading glories of Paradise, for she had early chosen that good part which shall not be taken from her. To uncommon beauty of person she united equal loveliness of character and deportment; and the sweet fragrance of her gentle virtues will long abide over the haunts of her youth and in the memories and the hearts of her surviving friends.

In Bardstown, on Friday, May 14th, in the 44th year of his age, Mr. JAMES AULD.

The departed listen not to the praises fondly lavished on their memory by the affection of their surviving friends. Could they address us from that spirit land to which they have gone, their language would be that of warning and exhortation.

Few, perhaps, have entered upon the pathway of life with fairer prospects of length of days, than the subject of these lines. But the Angel of Death nipped the blossom of his hopes—and he has now ceased to be affected by the visions of earth, and is concerned with the solemn realities of eternity. He has left an affectionate wife and four dear children to mourn his death. They, however, need not lament as others who have no hope. He was the subject of many prayers, and those prayers, we believe, were not unheard. During his illness, he was brought to feel his sinful condition by nature and practice, and cast earnestly upon his Savior. As he approached the trying hour, he called his family around his bed, and, with appropriate and solemn exhortations, affectionately took leave of them. About 11 o'clock on Friday morning, he expired, without a struggle or a groan, and his immortal spirit, we trust, took its flight to eternal bliss.

May the richest blessings of God, continue with his surviving family. —May his dying words never be forgotten by them.

A FRIEND.

BARDSTOWN HERALD.

For the Campaign!

The candidates of the two great parties for the Chief Magistracy of the Nation are about to be nominated, and it is desirable that the political Press of the country should lay before the people the facts and information which will enable them to make such a choice between the opposing candidates as will secure the peace, safety and welfare of the country for the next four years, and perhaps affect momentously its destinies for all time to come. THE BARDSTOWN HERALD will support the nominee of the Whig National Convention, believing that either Mr. FILLMORE, who has proved himself a sound practical statesman, and conducted all our affairs, foreign and domestic, during his administration with admirable wisdom and undeviating devotion to the public good; Mr. WEBSTER who has filled the first office in the cabinet, and every other position he has ever been called to occupy, with consummate ability, or Gen. SCOTT, the laurelled hero of two wars, who has shown in every emergency the practical sagacity, power of combination, prompt decision, and unswerving devotion to his country, which have ever characterized those great men of action, who have made for themselves a name in history; or any of that noble band of national and conservative statesmen, of whom the Whig party can justly boast, will administer the government in such a manner as to secure the safety and honor, and promote the prosperity and glory of this great republic.
